Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: .to refer to the text books for they tell us some interesting facts which bear on the point. 1st. In the stomach, animal food is more completely digested than vegetable food, is retained longer, appeases hunger more completely, and is more stimulating. 2nd. Vegetable substances leave the stomach with their texture only partially destroyed, and the less easily digested are but little affected till they reach the ileum, though previously fully exposed to the gastric, biliary and pancreatic fluids. 3rd. Fats and oils are most difficult of digestion. I have only now to quote a few statistics on the various digestibility of different foods, and it will be seen that the majority of them do require to be masticated first in order that the stomach may be able to exercise its functions to the greatest advantage. From the stomach, starch, fat, and oil pass unchanged, and together with any amylaceous and saccharine matters which have not been acted on by the saliva and gastric juice, are reserved for the action of bile and pancreatic fluid. It is, however, worthy of comment that certain undigested portions of the food mixed with residuum of bile forms the natural stimulus to the peristaltic action of the intestines, so that an excess of undigested or ill-digested matter will produce diarrhoea, and the absence of all indigestible matter--the result of over-refined cookery, causes constipation. The waste products of nitrogenous food are chiefly carried off in the shape of urea and uric...
