These ad.vantag.es exist in the shipment of both perishable and nonperishable foods. They consist in refrigerator service to towns which the wholesalers can not reach as frequently with their perishables as the packers can and in nun? cases-can not reach at. all. Nonperishable foods shipped in the pack crs cars receive the same special service that is given freeh meats and is far superior to the box-car service, upon which jobbers must depend for such shipments. The exclusive service of the packers with its attendant advantages grew up naturally enough. A modern packing house turns out so large a tonnage requiring regidar and frequent shipment as to make necessary the building up of a well organized special service. As the volume of traffic to outlying towns grew the usual method of handling less-than-carload shipments by assembling them at the railroad freight house by means of drays and trap cars was abandoned, and in the various packing centers the practice was generally established and now exists of making suel shipments from the plant. All interests require the prompt switching of packer cars to the transfer tracks and the expedited serrice they receive. It was natural, too, for the packers, as they, extended the field of their operations in manufacturing and merchandising, to secure the privilege of including in the meat car other items of traffic--butterine. butter, cheese, poultry, canned goods, cereal foods, and...
